The Toronto International Film Festival is a celebration of films from around the globe. As a vital part of the film industry, TIFF program reflects an objective and enlightened view.. AARRECH (1966) / Grihalee (1980) / Jhoom Barabar Jhoom (2007) / Khol Do (2002).Q: In C++ (Boost) - Writing a Binary Search Tree with class member for a node My current issue is writing a binary search tree using a class member for the node, rather than taking the information from a string for example, through using const char *, but that is a whole different story. I have already made several Binary Search Trees in C++ before, but this one is different to me because it has to be in classes, not vectors. My issue is in regards to the member "Name" (which I could have called "Key"), which is read from a file, and written to a binary file. After that, it has to be printed out, so there can only be two values, but also, if the current "Name" is equal to the Tree's root node's "Key", then it will not print. It should leave a node empty and keep moving on. I have posted my code below, and in response to comments, I will add the last few lines that are important. Also, the homework assignment is to be left as the homework in the method search(), but any help is appreciated, because this is for extra credit. (I realize I could have used strings, but it's required to be done this way) #include #include #include #include #include #include #include #include #include #include using namespace std; class DBTree { // ----- public: // ----- char Tree_FileName[20]; const int Tree_FileOpen_Success; const int Tree_FileOpen_Failed; // ----- char * Name; // ----- struct node { int key; node * left; node * right; }; // -----
