Q: How to find the purpose of a Javascript function? I am trying to debug a Javascript/html file that is part of a larger, complex, Java application. I have a feeling that I am going to come across functions like the ones below that I do not understand. The specific question that I have is: What purpose do these functions serve? (The more general one is: How can I find out the meaning of a function?) The file is a very old version of a project that is under development. A massive title for a massive page A: try using firebug for firefox or the built in debugger for the browser you're using. With these you can set a breakpoint and immediately get a call stack back that should at least let you know what line triggered the function. Tongue Injury Recovery Blog Do you remember your first ear piercing? I still fondly recall the day I got pierced alllllll the way to my earlobe. I feel like that awkward, pudgy kid in the back of the classroom reeeaaally. Yeah, I know. Very self-depricating. I never did get ears that were stud proof. I have about 5 or 6 scars on each ear between my earrings being cute and my failed efforts to stop the problem. The hole stayed closed for a long time (I'd rather not say how long) because of the nervous gremlins I enjoyed calling in every night. I have a quite the history of piercing. I started with my tongues in 1981. I pierced the noses of the grandchildren back then. After that, my ears popped and were pierced. My tongue was pierced (20 times ==), I say 5 times, but that includes the 3 times I got it stung through a piece of clothing. (Ugh) My face too is pretty adorned. I have 2 eyebrow points (ABE) and 8 chin piercings. I did **not** start with tongue or chin. Tongue. It took me a long time to get back to normal. Week 1 I was happy and proud. The week after was an adjustment of toys to do and places to go. Week two I was back to eating and smiling. Week 3 was abuse. Week 4 - recovery. Week 5 - rehab. My nose. The nose really, really hurt in the beginning. I had it on for weeks. The more I stretched and the more nose I poked, the better it got. Then it still hurt like Hell on week 5. I think getting it stung threw me. I began to catch the fun of the violations. The first violation is a small bummer. It begins to minimize. The pain spikes and dulls
